30th Anniversary of Rudolf Hess's Murder Commemorated in Berlin

In commemoration of the murder of Rudolf Hess on August 17, 1987, approximately 1,000 demonstrators and counter-demonstrators gathered in Berlin to mark the 30th anniversary of his death.

Security was extremely tight due to the recent bloody G20 demonstration in Hamburg and the violence at Charlottesville in the US. Helmeted police in riot gear enforced a strict ban on any Nazi symbols, images of Hess, flags, attire, music, and speech on the nationalist marchers. They were not allowed to display tattoos or chant slogans.

Counter-demonstrators blocked the road leading to the site where the prison formerly stood, forcing police to turn hundreds of Neo-Nazis around, to silently march back to the Spandau train station starting point.

One rally banner read, "I regret nothing," Hess's last words before being sentenced at the Nuremberg war crimes trials. Hess was the sole prisoner at Spandau prison from 1966 to 1987, when he was murdered. He is revered by National Socialists and their sympathizers for his lifelong fidelity to the National Socialist ideal.

News from Around the World USA

Internet censorship in the USA reached a new height in August when two domain names - dailystormer.com and stormfront.org - were “frozen” by registrars.

Stormfront.org hired a lawyer and regained control after about a month.

Dailystormer.com took a different approach. It registered a similar domain name - stormfront.ai - in a foreign country (Albania). This worked for only a few days before being shut down. A succession of domain names followed - is (Iceland), .ca (Catalonia), .ai (Anguilla), and .ws (Samoa). Each was soon shut down. During each shutdown it retreated to the “dark web”.

The arbitrary censorship by powerful private companies has underlined the need for government intervention, perhaps by declaring the Internet to be a “public utility”.

One of the organizers of White nationalist Richard Spencer's campus tours is suing Ohio State University. The university refuses to rent them campus space on the grounds there is a “substantial risk to public safety.”

Bristow sued Auburn University and won. He has filed lawsuits against Michigan State and Penn State. He also assisted the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) when it won the legal battle preceding the Charlottesville rally, which became the largest White nationalist rally in the United States in a decade.

United Kingdom

Six alleged former members of the banned “Nation Action” have been charged with “preparing for acts of terrorism”. This includes buying a machete “for the purpose of murdering” female Member of Parliament Rosie Cooper.

The “Gladius Machete” is reported to be the type used by ancient Celts and Romans. [It is unclear as to whether or not the purchase of a pocket knife would have resulted in a less serious charge.]

“Nation Action”, founded in 2013, became the first nationalist organization to be banned in the United Kingdom since the end of World War Two.

Four British soldiers have been arrested under the Terrorism Act of 2000.

According to an army spokesman: “We can confirm that a number of serving members of the Army have been arrested under the Terrorism Act for being associated with a proscribed far-right group...This is now the subject of a civilian police investigation and it would be inappropriate to comment further.”

USA — It's OK To Be White

"It's Okay To Be White" leaflets caused a stir at Harvard University in the USA. As the apparent originator of the campaign, a 4chan web-site, explained, the intent was to trigger an overreaction by the hysterical anti-White media to this very reasonable statement. The implication that it is NOT okay to be White—and that any statement to the contrary is "racism" and "hate"—exposes the hypocrisy and insanity of this "politically correct" anti-White race-hatred.

The web-site itsokaytobewhite.info serves as a resource page for anybody interested in getting in on the fun. This site is provided free courtesy of Zensurfrei.

A billboard saying "White Self-Hatred is Sick" has been removed due to pressure from the West Virginia governor's office.

The woman behind the billboard projects explained: "He [the man behind the campaign to get it removed] works for the state at DNR and was doing this all on company time. Due to his position of power, the billboard owners felt intimidated that he could cause them issues with their businesses and permits so they quickly took it down even though we have a six-month contract and are covered by the First Amendment....Only self hating white anti-whites would oppose a billboard telling white people not to hate themselves...If it were about black self-hatred no one would object, but since it's about whites not hating themselves it's deemed 'racist.'"

Members of the League of the South, Traditionalist Worker Party, and National Alliance gathered in Knoxville, TN on November 4, 2017 to stand against Antifa's threats of mass riots. We gathered in the Knoxville area at noon, prepared our banners, and went to an overpass over I-40, to show the public that "Knox [is] Against Antifa". We stood on the overpass for about an hour, getting 98% positive responses from on-coming traffic. Some people even showed their support for us online.

Canada

A 70-year-old retired teacher Arthur Topham from Quesnel, British Columbia, has been convicted for online distribution of anti-Semitic material online and banned from posting publicly on the internet for six months. At least he did not got to jail.

Upon learning for the charge, Topman is reported to have said the following: "Judging from the wording of this indictment, it looks like it's going to be a battle between the Christians and the Jews."

Jewish opponents claimed his website constituted an "indirect call for violence against the Jewish people." However, the judge disagreed: "He does not call for violence; his views were political satire... It is not his intent to indirectly incite violence."

"I felt that I had a duty as a Canadian citizen to alert the general public of an imminent threat... the interests of the Jewish lobby," Topham explained to the court, which he thanked for bringing his concerns to records.

Pro-White and pro-National Socialist posters appeared on the University of British Columbia's War Memorial Gym on November 11, 2017. Similar posters have turned up in Burnaby, Richmond, and Abbotsford.

South Africa

The “Afrikaaner Resistance Movement” is reportedly providing military training to thousands of young people in remote camps located northwest of Johannesburg. The goals are self-defense and the creation of a separate White state.

Camp commander Colonel Jooste explains:

“South Africa is bleeding... And this is why we have to train our people to be prepared.

“There's millions and millions of blacks around you, smothering you... and killing you.

“So you have to implement certain systems to survive and that's why we say the only system we can go to now for is not apartheid. That's second prize. First prize is freedom.

“We look different. We don't look the same as them.... They have thick lips. The lips are likely to curl upwards.... Okay? We have thin lips. The negroes ears on the inside are totally different to ours... It's much more sensitive. That's why us Afrikaners know, hit them against the ears and they'll fall to the ground. Because their ears are made differently.

“No one will force us to stand under this flag...We Afrikaners want our freedom. We want our own country.”

Afrikaners are moving into concentrated settlements in order to protect themselves from the ever escalating anti-White genocide. There have been over 200 farm attacks and over 50 murders so far this year alone.

Jaco Kleynhans, CEO of the “Orania Movement” explains: “The past weekend's brutal murders confirm that minorities—and specifically Afrikaners—are vulnerable when they live scattered all around... Where Afrikaners are concentrated in an area, they not only have political and economic power, but more importantly, have greater security.”

Eighteen-thousand people and five-thousand vehicles protested at a farm in Klapmuts against the ever increasing number of “farm murders” of White people in South Africa.

Finland

PVL member Jesse Torniainen was sentenced for aggravated assault after a man he kicked in the chest died of his injuries

The NS Nordic Resistance Movement (Finnish acronym PVL) could be banned in legal proceedings initiated by the National Police Board at the Pirkanmaa District Court on 29 August. Finnish law enforcement say the organization should be shut down as violent and racist, and as such undeserving of legal protection.

“Violent and openly racist organizations’ operations should not enjoy the protection of Finnish society,” said National Police Commissioner Seppo Kolehmainen in a statement.

Registered associations in Finland must abide by the laws of the land and ascribe to ‘good practices’. Although the Nordic Resistance Movement is not an officially registered association, the police board views it as an ideologically driven, unregistered association. Police say that the group cannot avoid the laws on associations simply by failing to register.

In its submissions to the court the Police Board says that the organization’s material contains content that contravenes the ‘good practices’ clause and stigmatizes groups and individuals, as well as material that advocates using violence to change the laws of the land.

The organization itself opposes the police suit and is demanding its legal costs are paid. The movement says in submissions to the court that its leading figures have not been convicted of slander or ethnic agitation. The organization also cites the right to freedom of association.

Last year a member, Jesse Torniainen, was sentenced to two years in jail for an aggravated assault that allegedly led to a man’s death at a Nordic Resistance Movement demonstration in Helsinki.

That case has been appealed by the prosecutor, who was not satisfied with the sentence.

If the organization is banned, it will become illegal to raise funds or recruit members, or even to disseminate stickers and other propaganda material.

According to some experts, it would also free police from the obligation to allow NRM demonstrations.

“Planning to meet up as an association is then a punishable offence,” said Lauri Tarasti, an expert on the law of association in December. “It’s not permitted to continue any operations in the unregistered association’s name. Dissolution of the organization would prohibit even, for example, placing its stickers on a lamppost or maintaining the website.”

Finland previously banned national socialist organizations in the 1970s when several associations established by Nazi Pekka Siitoin were dissolved on the grounds that they opposed democracy, and were therefore in breach of the Paris Peace Treaties of 1947 that ended the Second World War.

Initial statements were heard on Tuesday, with the main hearing due to take place in October.

Germany

88-year-old Ursula Haverbeck is on trial again, this time in Detmold, for questioning the so-called “holocaust.”

At an earlier trial she handed revisionist literature to the judge, prosecutor, and journalists. Furthermore, she has also filed charges against the “Central Council of Jews” in Germany on the grounds it is prosecuting innocent people.

Mrs. Haverbeck is obviously a very brave woman! We salute her!

A court has approved the decision by the local Berlin government to fire a man for reading Mein Kampf at work.

Thousands of people wearing “I love Hitler” t-shirts and yelling “heil!” attended a “Rock against Foreign Domination” festival in Thema in Thuringia. Altogether over 6,000 people attended this event, which officials described as the largest National Socialist event in the nation. The state prosecutor has initiated an investigation.

“Soldiers of Odin”, which was founded in 2015 in Finland, is on patrol in Stavanger. It protects its countrymen from the Third World criminals and invaders disguised as “immigrants”.

Japan

Japanese surgeon and famous media figure Dr. Katsuya Takasu has been expelled from the American Academy of Cosmetic Surgery because of pro-National Socialist Internet posts two years ago.

“There is no doubt that the Jews were persecuted. But we only know it from hearsay and all of it is based on information from the Allies. Aren't we acting the same as the Chinese people who believe in the Nanjing Massacre? I only want to know the truth... I think both Nanjing and Auschwitz are fabrications”.
